You scored 20 to 29

Ok, your results fall in the middle category. This means that you enjoy sex with your partner, you actually could be sexually compatible, but you may be falling for some of society's misconceptions that can eventually erode the fun and pleasure of a relationship.

Sex is meant to be adult play, and in today's world of relationships, if we don't have a healthy dose of play, fun, laughter, letting go and excitement, things inevitably get stale. There is a huge misconception about sex in our PC-obsessed world. I don't know how the puritans are winning but they seem to be doing so even in our modern so-called liberal age.

Perhaps the issue is not our sexual liberation, perhaps the issue is our understanding of relationships. People seem to be a lot freer sexually when they were young, single or with their affairs. This means that our desire to have fun, let go and express ourselves sexually is there, it's just that we don't think it should STILL be there once we get into a committed long-term relationship. The result is a 50% divorce rate and an 80% dull long-term relationship rate.

The answer is not just to be free in our sexual thoughts with our partners, but to be free in ALL thought. We need to allow our minds to roam free and PLAY with our partners' minds. Washing up needs to be a fun, and so does sex. Otherwise, in this very comfortable and abundant world we live in, why even have a partner?
